Intelligence Leader Warns of Stalin's State of Mind Today

BOSTON —(INS)— The deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency said yesterday that Stalin's state of mind is more important to the world than the location of "many Soviet divisions."

Allen W. Dulles, brother of Presidential Envoy John Foster Dulles, told the New England Council Conference that the Russian blackout policy was stiffening and the United States can only speculate on the reasons.

Dulles suggested that the secrecy may boomerang "since, by creating an apprehension of the unknown, it tends to force the pace of rearmament and lead us to increased inventiveness so as to be ready to meet Russia at every point."
